SECTION 3. SERVICE TO THE PROFESSION

2.

The nominee was the principle founder and driving force in the establishment of the National Organization of Minority Architects. He served as its chairman during its internship and continued as N.O.M.A.'s first President until it attained creditability.

N.O.M.A. has been organized to operate exclusively for charitable, scientific, professional and educational purposes.

In establishing a permanent organization, it was necessary to delineate long range goals and develop means of implementing those goals on a daily basis as well as improving the respective member firms in order that they may function more efficaciously, realizing permanency depended upon the ability to establish legal, professional and public creditability.

Under the nominee's leadership, N.O.M.A. has evolved to a responsible national organization whose services and counsel are in continuously increasing demand by other national groups and agencies and its directory has been requested by many agencies and publications. N.O.M.A. has been asked to participate in numerous conventions.

In 1967, at the Annual Convention of the American Institute of Architects held in Portland, Oregon, Whitney M. Young, Jr. spelled out the social responsibility of the architectural profession in terms of equal opportunity for all persons within the profession. This speech was a moving one, striking the very heart of the problem and it motivated the members of the American Institute of Architects to establish the Whitney M. Young, Jr. award.

The honor, an A.I.A. medal in memory of Whitney M. Young, Jr. is presented to an architect or architecturally oriented organization making a significant contribution toward meeting the architectural professions responsibility to the social issues of the day. Wendell J. Campbell received this honor at the Annual Convention of the American Institute of Architects in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania in May of 1976. Mr. Campbell was cited for "his services to the profession and the Institute compliments his dedication to the social and economic concerns of his community."

SECTION 3. URBAN DESIGN

2.

As Architect-Planner for the Purdue-Calumet Development Foundation nominee developed a model code compliance-rehabilitation program whereby every building in the City of East Chicago, Indiana (population - 50,000) would be surveyed for code violations every five years. Nominee organized and conducted a voluntary rehabilitation program providing to property owners technical, financial, landscaping and block club organizational assistance. This model has since been used by many urban renewal agencies throughout the country.

In the process of developing this program the nominee prepared for the City of East Chicago its Housing Ordinance and assisted in the preparation of a new Zoning Ordinance.

Cognizant of the concerns of people being displaced through governmental action, the nominee was successful in amending the Urban Renewal Plan for the community to include the provision that persons being displaced by urban renewal would have top priority in bidding back on their land provided that their proposed development met the requirements of urban renewal. He proceeded to organize displaced citizens into a non-profit corporation and with the support of the local building trade unions who provided financial and on-job training, redeveloped much of the community with maximum citizen participation.

His similar efforts in Gary, Indiana resulted in the completion of the Saint John Homes Rehabilitation Project which was honored by the Chicago Chapter A.I.A. Distinguished Building Award.

SECTION 3. ARCHITECTS IN GOVERNMENT OR INDUSTRY

2.

For many years the nominee has worked to improve the relationship and communication between the architect and the various components which compile the building team. He has continually served as an advisor to small contractors and minority trade organizations as to ways and means to improve the administrative and professional quality of their businesses.

He has served as a board member to the Northwest Indiana Construction and Trade Union's Outreach Program where his input enabled many minority youths to gain opportunities and careers in construction through their apprenticeship training programs. He provided leadership to many small contractors desiring to form development corporations thereby creating their own work. He has often been requested to serve as a liaison between government agencies and grass root communities as to programs being developed for inner city communities.

As President of the National Organization of Minority Architects he was instrumental in organizing co-sponsor joint conferences consisting of national organizations comprising the building team i.e. (minority contractors, bankers, planners, architects, engineers and housing specialists). The joint conference meets in Washington, D. C. each fall and serves as a forum whereby all might discuss their common problems and seek common solutions. The conferences have been expanded to include input from the Federal Government and private industry. For his efforts the nominee was cited on February 20, 1974 "by the publishers and editors of Engineering News - Record from among the many men who serve the best interests of the construction industry."

SECTION 3. ARCHITECTURAL PRACTICE

After ten years as architect-planner for a quasi-public urban renewal organization, the nominee started his own architectural firm to practice what he called "environmental architecture." The firm stresses that service must start at the "grass-root" level to assure results that meet the needs of the users. Consideration for the sociological aspect of the people involved is just as important as the monetary aspect or strictly following the written requirements for the project. The firm feels that most negative attitudes that surround some projects come primarily because the neighborhoods involved are not actively participating in the planning process. Because of this, an effort is made by his firm to get out and explain to the communities just what is being planned. This enables the firm to get their participation, endorsement and help in the early stages of the program, budget and time restraints for the project. One of the earliest examples of this was the firm's involvement in the Saint Luke Housing Development in East Chicago, Indiana. The church property was under threat of urban renewal and most of the church members had homes and property in the urban renewal area. Through the firm's efforts, a non-profit corporation was formed and a 120-unit development and new church was made possible for Saint Luke.

The firm's ability and achievement won acclaim and notice and the City of Chicago commissioned the firm to do a neighborhood community center with citizen participation at Madison and Kedzie Streets. This was the primary area of inner city turmoil when Chicago was rocked by the violent aftermath following the death of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Today it is the site of the Garfield Park Neighborhood Center.

The firm has grown to a staff of thirty, representing many races and maintains a backlog of public and institutional buildings to design. The firm has been acclaimed by the Institute, local governments and the communities for its design and professional capabilities. Black Enterprise Magazine has cited the firm as being one of the top one hundred most successful black businesses in the country.
