Proceedings of the Fifty-ninth Annual Convention of the American Institute of Architects

Held in the Auditorium of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States
Washington, D. C., May 5, 6, 7, 1926

Published by the Board of Directors of the American Institute of Architects

Edited by the Executive Secretary

It is perhaps a happy analogy that your Fine Arts medal was given tonight to a musician, because I have always felt that the most wonderful thing in civilization, the most wonderful evidence of the possibilities of team play, is what an orchestra can do, the unified and harmonious effort of so many individuals under competent leadership. We would like you to carry away the thought that we have a pretty good orchestra here in Washington, who are playing well together. We have a good plan, and we hope we may count on your support in your communities to give us encouragement from there, and to make the people there feel that they want to inquire of their Congressman what he has done to help the Plan of Washington along.

I had hoped, when I was first threatened with the chance of saying a few words to you, to quote the Seville resolution as our ideal, but that part of my speech has been made so much better by a previous speaker than I could make it, that I will merely add that those things which he said, I say also with regard to the National Capital. Thank you very much. (Applause.)

THE PRESIDENT. We thank you, Major Grant, for what you have said. If there is one duty which rests more strongly than another upon the entire membership of the American Institute of Architects it is the large measure of responsibility which the profession of architecture assumes that it has toward our National Capital.

You may recall a few years ago that it was the American Institute of Architects which succeeded in having removed from the Mall that great blot upon the city, the old Pennsylvania Railway Station. The great president of a great railroad [Cassatt] was public spirited enough and appreciative enough, when the matter came to him through the Institute, to succeed in bringing about a change. We recall his coming to a dinner like this and accepting Honorary Membership in our organization. I want to assure you that we realize, as perhaps the people in general do not, that other harm threatens this great Plan of Washington, even more dangerous because less obvious. And we are always at the service of those who, like yourself, are interested in this great city.

Fellowships Announced

THE PRESIDENT (continuing). The last item of business is the award of Fellowships in the American Institute of Architects. The Institute honors distinction among its own members by awarding the title of Fellow. As the members are aware, there has been a feeling that the method of selection which is very difficult, has been faulty and should be reformed. For several years earnest efforts have been under way to bring about that reform. We feel that the object has been almost achieved, although there are still some difficulties to be cleared away.

This year, in announcing the awards, I am sure you will share with me—and with all of the Directors—a disappointment that the list is shorter by half than it should be. We can only hope that another year will bring about a more complete adjustment, and that we may have your patience in the meantime in behalf of many of our distinguished men who years ago should have been recognized as Fellows.

We will ask the Secretary to read the names of those who have been elected.

THE ACTING SECRETARY. The names of the Fellows selected this year are as follows: Howard Sill, Herbert W. C. Browne, James Ford Clapp, Harry W. Gardner, Charles W. Killam, William G. Rantoul, Hubert G. Ripley, John B. Slee, Thomas Edward Snook, August C. Esenwein, F. H. Bosworth, Jr., Arthur N. Gibb, Alfred Hoyt Granger, Charles S. Schneider, W. G. Installation of New Officers

THE PRESIDENT. The Convention today elected its new Officers and Directors for the coming year. In the ordinary course, six directors hold over, three new directors besides the officers are elected. One additional director this year takes the place of another by reason of the vacancy caused by the untimely death of Mr. Schnaittacher. Were it not for the lateness of the hour, I know you would be

In sending out various notices of suspension to corporate members of The Institute whose 1939 dues were unpaid in whole or in part, we found that, technically, you should receive such a notice - as there was a balance due of $1.00 on account of 1939 dues.

To clear the record, this small sum was paid by the undersigned in lieu of sending you a telegram about so small a matter.
