AIA Architect 4195

Robert E. Bryant, FAIA, 63, Washington, D.C., who in 1965 cofounded one of the nation's largest minority-owned design firms, Bryant & Bryant, Architects, Planners & Engineers, died February 2. With his brother and partner, Charles I. Bryant, FAIA, he led the firm in designing more than 700 projects worldwide, including the University of the District of Columbia and the Richmond Exhibition Center. As a community and housing activist and mentor, Bryant demonstrated a strong commitment to improving the quality of life for people in the inner city and beyond.

Louis H. Goettlmann, AIA, 91, Haddonfield, N.J., a noted historic preservationist who practiced architecture for 60 years in the Philadelphia area, died January 17. Early in his career he designed parts of the Steel Pier in Atlantic City. A cofounder of the Haddonfield Preservation Society, he helped save that town's historic district. In 1992, his component, AIA West Jersey, created the Louis Heyer Goettlmann Award in his honor.

Joseph D. Murphy, FAIA, 87, St. Louis, former dean of the Washington University School of Architecture and 1957 president of AIA St. Louis, died January 11. In the mid-1930s, his design for the Muny Opera won a national competition; the structure was built in 1939.

MURPHY

With his firm, Murphy & Mackey, he designed the Missouri Botanical Garden in 1960 and Washington University's John M. Olin Library in 1962. Murphy also restored the Basilica of St. Louis, King of France, in 1963 and designed numerous churches and other buildings in the St. Louis area.

Edwin "Eddie" Weihe, AIA, 87, Washington, D.C., founder of the Weihe Partnership and recipient of the Washington Chapter/AIA Centennial Award in 1991, died December 28. Known as "Mr. Zoning" for his attempts to modernize the city's zoning and building codes, Weihe, in 50 years of practice, was the first to promote flat-plate concrete construction as an answer to the city's building height restriction, and he pioneered the use of precast concrete as a building cladding material in Washington.
